

Seasons change...even you & I do....

by Littina George Manalel

Changes are something which are inevitable.

*It's not only the seasons,
but even you and me change.... not only once but many times...*

Life brings certain changes to us.

Some we purposely take.

As a cradle, chair and coffin are made from the same tree, we also take different roles in this life

Not for anything else

but just had this thought that what came before my eyes today let it spread in this white sheet.

I saw green leaves on the tree and them shaded in yellow, lying on the floor there in the dustbin has it turned brown also Finally, into grey, the color of their burned ashes.

*When given heed to the tree in the midst
I felt it was sympathizing, for all those colour changes which i bore,
and all the ones which i am ought to bear.*

In silence, it promulgates, inevitable the changes are.

Not once but many times seasons change, even you & I do change.

Have seen it many times

but hasn't stroked me though than a thing of beauty I could see,

an art of my life in that stillness now.

I saw it as a cradle once,

now as a chair sitting on,

once and forever I'll see again

as I lie, a coffin then.

Through it I saw

all milestones in my evolution.

Not once but many times seasons change,

and so, do I and you in this lifetime.